- In January 1968 Nadolny was almost inactive, since all is activities of the previous months had been unsuccessful or had been stopped by the Russians. He felt that this reflected a period of indecision among the Russians, with no one at Earlahorst willing to assume responsibility. Sokolovsky's long absence appeared to stop the citims administrative machine. Nadolny believed that the Russians were properling to make some sort of compromise with the western powers before relations were irrevocably injured.
- 2. Nadolny indicated that the creation of a new party in the Russian Zone was preceding very slowly and that it would be activated after the CDU problem had been settled.
- 3. LDP leader Külz was slowly losing Russian favor, according to Nadolny, since he had apparently lost all prestige with his party throughout Germany. Although he continued a whole-hearted collaborator of the Russians, it was assumed that Dr. Külz would not hold the dominant position in the new party for which he had been originally scheduled.
